the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million (13.5% of the population) (ONS 2004).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health care needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (2001) has set out a strategy for the care of older people, which includes the following aims:

- to improve the quality of life of older people;
- to ensure that older people are able to live independently in their own homes;
- to ensure that older people are able to access the services they need.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are employed in the service sector has increased from 20% to 40% (ILO 1998). The service sector is now the largest sector in the world economy.

There are a number of reasons why the service sector has grown so rapidly. One reason is that the service sector is becoming more important in the world economy. Another reason is that the service sector is becoming more important in the world economy. A third reason is that the service sector is becoming more important in the world economy.

The service sector is becoming more important in the world economy. This is because the service sector is becoming more important in the world economy. The service sector is becoming more important in the world economy.
